

The proposed rule is particularly burdensome on small-market broadcasters. The cost of acquiring and maintaining the equipment necessary to record programming 24 hours per day is more than the average small market station can afford. The financial implications of such a rule will undoubtedly result in cutbacks in local news and local public service programming in order to foot the bill.